2006 SEASON PREVIEW

The song remains the same around College Park as the 2006 football season approaches for the University of Maryland, and so do the questions from those wondering what Ralph Friedgen's sixth year on the job will hold. Phrased as many different ways as there are blades of grass on the Byrd Stadium turf, the query "Do the recent 5-6 campaigns signal a decline in the Terp program?" will continue to be asked until the Terps return to the form of the three seasons under Friedgen prior to 2004-05.

In 2006, Maryland will again field a young team, but unlike in the past two seasons, it will be a youthful team that has seen its share of work on game day. An experienced quarterback, talent and depth on the offensive line and at tailback, and arguably the deepest and most versatile linebacking corps in the Atlantic Coast Conference are among the strengths.

The primary question comes at wide receiver, where the team is extremely talented but equally green, as well as in depth and who will start at several other spots, but there is no arguing that the pieces are in place for significant improvement in the win column.

"WE HAVE TALENT - WE ARE JUST VERY YOUNG. OUR WORK IN THE SUMMER AND THE PRESEASON SHOULD HELP THEIR TECHNIQUE AND THINGS LIKE COMING OUT OF THEIR CUTS. CATCHING THE BALL WILL COME WITH CONFIDENCE. BUT HOW FAST THEY DEVELOP WILL PLAY A BIG ROLE IN WHAT KIND OF AN OFFENSE WE ARE." - RALPH FRIEDGEN

With the ACC's schedule's strength unquestioned year-in and year-out now, the Terrapins will have to earn their way to a fourth bowl in Friedgen's tenure. And if that is to happen, it will with the man called an "offensive mastermind" at the helm as Friedgen will serve as the team's offensive coordinator for the first time in his current stint with the Terps.

The following is a position-by-position look at the 2006 Maryland Terrapins:

OFFENSE

Despite the loss of its most explosive player (Vernon Davis) a year early to the NFL Draft, the Terrapin offense could be more potent in 2006.

The Terps return an experienced, hard-working senior quarterback and a young talented signal-caller eons ahead of where he was when he took the field as a freshman in 2004. They return an All-ACC back and add one of the school's all-time leaders in touchdowns who returns from injury. They return the most experienced and talented offensive line in years (which also gets back its senior scheduled to have been the top player at the position in 2005 but was also lost to injury). Last, but certainly not least, its offensive coordinator this season will, for the first time, be the man who knows the system best - the man who devised it.

At a glance, there is a single question mark to the entire offense heading into fall.

"I believe the key to our offense right now is the development of our young wide receivers," said head coach/offensive coordinator Ralph Friedgen. "We have talent - we are just very young. Our work in the summer and the preseason should help their technique and things like coming out of their cuts. Catching the ball will come with confidence. But how fast they develop will play a big role in what kind of an offense we are."

They are the tallest, fastest, most athletic group of receivers Friedgen has had at Maryland. They are also the youngest and least experienced. And though their progress will be paramount to the team's success, they are not the lone area of focus.

"We also have to get better at quarterback than we have been the last few years," said Friedgen. "We have had the ability to make plays, we need to eliminate mistakes. Heading in, I don't think we are where we have to be, but I don't think we are very far off either."

Quarterback

Sam Hollenbach's first season as the Terps' starter was met with mixed reviews. His gunslinger's mentality gave Maryland the feeling that it could stay in any game, a sentiment not present the season previous. A second look shows that completing just one pass in the Florida State game (he left due to injury) and interceptions kept him from leading the league in passing yards and quarterback rating. His other numbers were that good (61% completions percentage, 2,539 yards). A year later, he is more comfortable in the offense, an injured shoulder he played the second half of the season with is healed and the hope is that the turnovers will be a thing of the past. It is with these expectations that he enters the season as the clear-cut starter.

Hollenbach's primary competition for the starting job in 2006 will be sophomore Jordan Steffy. Steffy redshirted a year ago and in spring showed that he is clearly improved from a mental and mechanical standpoint. A complete quarterback who throws and runs with equal proficiency, Steffy would be a more viable option as the starter if he had shown that he could consistently move the offense in the spring. That success came in spurts. Regardless, he gives the team the best one-two punch it has had at the position in years.

Behind the top duo will be redshirt freshman Chris Turner, sophomore Bobby Sheahin and true freshman Jeremy Ricker, with all three having the same stumbling block to playing time – experience. Turner is the most comfortable at this point in the offensive system and heads the group. Sheahin, a transfer from West Virginia prior to 2005, throws and runs very well but is still working to pick up the system. Of the three this year, he is the most likely to move closer to the top of the depth chart if he can make progress in that department. Ricker is the highest-recruited quarterback in Friedgen's tenure and will likely redshirt.

The last of Maryland's quarterbacks, Josh Portis, will be sitting out the season due to NCAA transfer rules. Portis spent 2005 at Florida (as a reserve, he was the Gators' fourth-leading rusher) and in his short time at Maryland in the spring, he showed that the running skills he displayed in Gainesville were no fluke. Also possessing a strong arm, this year will serve as a learning experience and if he picks up on things well, expect him to be a serious challenger to the starting role in '07.

"Sam needs to cut down on turnovers, but he knows our offense and I have confidence in him," said Friedgen. "I am encouraged by our depth this year also and heading into future seasons. In the past we have struggled with having a senior quarterback leave and there is no one ready to step in but I feel like the numbers we have now are good for our future at the position as well as for competition this year."

Tailback

In 2005, the Terps entered a season for the first time in nearly a decade without a clear-cut starting tailback. A year later, the situation could not be more different.

Not only does the team return a player who looked like an emerging star at the end of last season in second team All-ACC back Lance Ball, but it also returns its top breakaway threat since 2002 in senior Josh Allen. Ball – the ACC's leading returning rusher (903 yards, 4.8 avg. in '05) – is not yet the home run hitter Allen has been in his career, but the package he possesses lacks little else. He has great balance, quick feet, sees the hole well and is a good pass catcher. The objective for Allen in the spring was to take it slow and not get hurt but by the end of the Sam Hollenbach returns as the incumbent starter at quarterback for the Terps in 2006.

"I AM ANXIOUS TO SEE THE PROGRESS OF JOSH ALLEN AND WHAT HE CAN BRING BACK TO OUR OFFENSE. IF HE CAN GIVE US THE BREAKAWAY THREAT THAT HE GAVE US IN THE PAST AND YOU ADD THAT TO A LANCE (BALL), WHO I THINK WILL ONLY CONTINUE TO IMPROVE, I THINK WE CAN BE PRETTY GOOD." - RALPH FRIEDGEN

session, the senior – who missed all of last season with a knee injury – was healthy, regaining his old speed and chomping at the bit. In short, the top of the Terrapins' depth chart looks to be in more than capable hands.

The possible contributions, however, do not end with the top two backs. Senior J.P. Humber looked like a downhill runner in the spring, putting himself next in line for playing time. His main competition will come from junior Keon Lattimore, a back who performed well last year but still seems to have untapped physical potential. Rounding out the group will be first-year players Morgan Green and Da'Rel Scott. Green showed in spring that he still has some learning to do while coaches are excited to see if the speedy Scott can adjust to life at the collegiate level.

"I am anxious to see the progress of Josh Allen and what he can bring back to our offense," said Friedgen. "If he can give us the breakaway threat that he gave us in the past and you add that to a Lance (Ball), who I think will only continue to improve, I think we can be pretty good. Behind them, J.P. Humber showed us in the spring that we will have a real good battle between he and Lattimore and you throw a couple of the young guys in the mix and we are pretty deep and talented."

Fullback

Leading the way for the Terp tailbacks will be a group whose main objective will be to add depth. Junior Tim Cesa has settled in at the position to the point where "converted linebacker" will likely no longer be required in front of his name. Cesa is an aggressive blocking back who began learning the finer points of the position last year and has clearly found a home.

The team's depth was depleted somewhat last year, but 2005 walk-on Chris Gronkowski – one of the strongest players on the team pound-for-pound – looks like he will be able to step in and give some solid support. Newcomer Cory Jackson will also get a good look and have a shot to play. The Morgantown, W.Va., native could bring a running threat to the position.

Tim Cesa has made the transition from linebacker to fullback.

Friedgen has hinted that first-year center Evan Eastburn could also get a look in goal line situations and the Terp H-backs can also factor in when splitting up the repetitions.

"It is clear that Tim Cesa is developing into a good fullback," said Friedgen. "What we need is for some of the young kids like Gronkowski or Cory Jackson to come on and give us some help there. We could also get some help there from the H-back position from a player like (Jason) Goode or Drew Gloster."

Wide Receiver

The Terp trio of Derrick Fenner, Danny Melendez and Jo Jo Walker have moved on, leaving the team without 109 of the 210 balls caught last season. That pretty much sums up the team's concerns at the position headed into 2006.

On the positive, the five players recruited for last season all appear to have panned out from a talent perspective, a feat not often achieved in a single signing class. This year's group of receivers, though lacking experience, have the athletic intangibles that few – if any – have ever had at Maryland.

At the "X" spot, second-year players Isaiah Williams and Terrell Skinner will square off for the starting job. Williams is the total package athletically, but has not put it all together on the field. If he is able to, the team will have a top-flight receiver. Skinner is a quiet, go-about-your-business player who Friedgen praises for his toughness on a regular basis. A former quarterback, Skinner runs well, has long arms and made plays when given a chance in the spring. Sophomore Matt Goldberg is the veteran of the group while first-year player Adrian Cannon could also be a factor as the most highly-touted incoming receiver.

The team's most experience will reside at the "Z" spot where Drew Weatherly, one of just two senior wide receivers, resides. In the offseason, Weatherly looked like the player the Terps thought they had when he arrived on campus with then-wide receiver Vernon Davis. He has good size and speed and looked in the spring like he will be able to utilize that this season. Sophomore Danny Oquendo (the starter in the slot) will back up Weatherly. Oquendo is quick and hard-nosed and has become one of the quarterbacks' favorite targets because of his reliable hands. Another player who may be a difference-maker is redshirt freshman Darrius Heyward-Bey, the fastest player on the team. Heyward-Bey is a field stretcher and as he continues to learn the offense, could become a major factor. True freshman Emani Lee-Odai will also work at "Z."

Behind Oquendo in the slot is the fifth 2005 signee looking to make his mark, Nolan Carroll. Carroll started making his move midway through last year, showing he had overcome an injury suffered as a prep and looks as though the move from the outside was the correct one. He is quick and has shown the ability to make plays in traffic.

Senior Greg Powell is a steady receiver who will help from an experience standpoint while Stephen Smalls, the team's best leaper (47-inch vertical jump), will look to learn the offense.

"I like the group of receivers we have," said Friedgen. "You can't lose as much as we lost and just expect to move on without a hiccup. My hope is that they continue to progress throughout the season and give us some of what we see from an athletic standpoint. They should be a good group, it is just a matter of when."

Tight End

The ACC's top receiver and the Terps' top offensive player of a year ago has departed for the National Football League and has left in his wake shoes that no one expects to be filled completely. But what the Terrapins still have in the fold will hopefully add up to close to what has been lost with the departure of Vernon Davis.

Much in the same mold as Maryland's other departed tight end, Derek Miller, Dan Gronkowski and Joey Haynos will enter the season atop the depth chart serving as the squad's "big" tight ends. Both are over 6-5, have added size and strength in their last few years in the program and improved as blockers. What they have to offer in the passing game is not yet known, but both have good hands. Gronkowski's transition from quarterback, which he was when he arrived at Maryland, has been one of steady improvement while in the spring, Haynos showed the ability to get down the middle of the field and use his height to make plays.

The other player fitting the "big" tight end mode is Tommy Galt, a redshirt freshman who could get a look in multiple tight end or goal line formations.

The Terrapins do not utilize an H-back the way they did two years ago, but with the departure of Davis and the addition of Friedgen as offensive coordinator that could change that a bit. Junior Jason Goode and true freshman Drew Gloster each have the versatility to catch, block and split out wide. Goode has yet to break out but will be counted on to provide more of a spark to the passing game. Goode and Gloster both run well and could provide Friedgen with potential matchup problems for a defense as they progress.

"Our tight ends did better in the spring than I anticipated," said Friedgen. "Gronkowski and Joey Haynos both block pretty well. Are they Vernon Davis? No. But they are two good tight ends and hopefully they can continue to improve."

Offensive Line

Strength or weakness at any other unit can always make a difference in an offense's performance, but no other unit can help compensate for shortcomings or accentuate strengths like an offensive line. Heading into this season, the Maryland offensive line looks to be the best and deepest of any in the Friedgen Era, and could be that difference-making type of group.

This year's offensive line returns three starters from 2005, its top lineman from 2004 (who missed '05 due to an injury) and starting-caliber depth at both tackle and guard. The lone concern as the season approaches is an inexperienced center position.

Maryland entered spring camp with sophomore Edwin Williams, the frontrunner for the starting job with the goal of improving his comfort at the pivot as much as his overall play. Less than a week into practice, he went down with a finger injury that required surgery and kept him out the remainder of spring. Williams has good size, quickness, strength and intelligence, but in work as a reserve a year ago, nerves got the better of him at times.

He will be ready for fall camp but will see competition from redshirt freshman Phil Costa for the job as Costa took all of the reps with the first team in spring and continued to impress while getting noticeably bigger and stronger than he was as a true freshman. Newcomer Evan Eastburn will provide depth and hopefully get up to speed quickly.

Junior Andrew Crummey leads the pack of guards from his post on the right side. Once noticeably thin by lineman standards, the heady junior now looks that part at 301 pounds and could be poised for a breakout season. Garrick Clig and Lee Oliver will line up behind him. One of the team's strongest linemen, Clig got work as a backup center with the numbers low in the offseason, joining Crummey as possibilities to fill in if needed.

On the left side, it will be a battle for the starting job between incumbent Donnie Woods and sophomore Jaimie Thomas. Woods, who started all of last year despite an injured shoulder, missed spring as the injury healed while Thomas made ground. Woods plays smart and with passion and will be tough to unseat, while Thomas has been moving closer to the play anticipated of him when he first arrived, showing size and athleticism. Junior Jack Griffin will likely redshirt while working to make the transition from the defensive side of the ball.

If the Terps don't lay claim to the league's best line, it will be hard to debate against their tackles. The team's top lineman from 2004 (and an anticipated honors candidate a year ago), Stephon Heyer returns after injuring his knee in camp a year ago. Heyer successfully made his way through spring and gives Maryland an experienced pass blocker with impeccable credentials on Hollenbach's blind side. Unlike in season's past, however, Heyer will not be a shoe-in for the job as junior Scott Burley is healthy and, at a stout 6-5, 326 pounds, is playing his best ball.

On the right side, a potential star was born in 2005. With Heyer out, then-true frosh Jared Gaither stepped in after game three at left tackle and did not relinquish the spot – or give up a sack – the entire season. At 6-9 and 350 pounds, Gaither is a load who can run and pass block and proved in last year's NC State game that he can handle the duties on the right side. Midway through that contest, Gaither shifted from the left to the right side of the line after the team struggled with overall No. 1 pick Mario Williams, and from that point forward the freshman shut the star defensive end down.

Gaither's chief competition will come from Dane Randolph, another Terp bookend on the rise. Randolph saw significant action last year and has improved seemingly with every snap since moving from defensive tackle his freshman year. He continues to get bigger and stronger, yet has maintained his good feet, giving the team yet another competitive player at the tackle position.

"I think our offensive line should be solid at its worst," said Friedgen. "We have more depth than we have had than in the past. If we can stay healthy, we have a chance to be pretty darned good.

DEFENSE

For the first time in five years, the defensive side of the ball had its share of difficulties last season. Though the scoring average was relatively low based on the help opposition was given from turnovers, Maryland's defense stumbled at crucial points in games last year, often when the Terps were trying to hold off the opposition or mount a comeback late in the contest.

On the other hand, the Terps were 19th nationally in pass defense and led the nation in passing touchdowns allowed, yielding just four TDs the entire season. That will be something to build on for first-year defensive coordinator Chris Cosh, a local product who has had his share of coaching at institutions known for producing a tough, attacking defense (Illinois, Michigan State, Kansas State). Cosh's style will not look drastically different from the successful, upfield style of that of his predecessor Gary Blackney, yet his in-your-face coaching approach and attention to every minute detail already has his players' attention.

Maryland returns every top defensive lineman this season, a slew of talented linebackers, and an improving group of defensive backs. On paper, the weaknesses are few and the expectation is a return to one of the nation's leading defensive units.

"I anticipate that we will be improved on defense this year," said Friedgen. "I don't think our philosophy has changed with Coach Cosh coming on – we still like to get after people. I have been pleased with what I have seen and look forward to seeing how things go when we crank things up."

Defensive Line

This year's defensive line will have at least one benefit that groups in previous years did not – all of its starters and key reserves return this year. Last year, DE Shawne Merriman left a year early for the NFL; the year before, DT Randy Starks did as well. This season, the hope is that continuity and the return of its top senior will help the unit take the next step.

Jeremy Navarre saw significant playing time as a freshman in 2005 and should be an even bigger factor in the Terps defense this season.

At defensive tackle, senior Conrad Bolston returns after his finest season as a Terrapin. Bolston led the team in sacks (5.0) and was second in TFLs (5.5) from his spot on the interior last year, showing that he can fill a gap and get through one with equal proficiency. Bolston is strong, moves well, plays with great intensity and should be set for postseason honors if he continues on the track set last season. Behind him will be second-year player Travis Ivey who could be a Bolston-in-waiting and will likely benefit greatly from working behind the senior standout. Ivey has the ideal combination of size and athleticism, needing only to learn the finer points of playing the position to be an effective contributor. Omarr Savage one of two defensive ends who will move inside to get a look.

Conrad Bolston proved to be able to stuff the run and rush the passer after leading the team with 5.0 sacks last season.

At nose tackle, juniors Carlos Feliciano and Dre Moore will do battle for the starting job. Feliciano is good against the run, playing with good leverage and is a steady force. Moore will look to get off to a start that matches the finishes he experienced in his first two seasons at Maryland. One of the strongest players on the team, he moves tremendously well and has the skills of an all-conference player. If he can get the "motor" running early and not let it stop, he could have a breakout year. Behind that duo will be Rob Armstrong, a player who returned from injury in the spring and played well at times. Also in the mix will be Mack Frost, the second end who will get a look inside.

The player who excited players as much as any in the offseason was defensive end Jeremy Navarre. Navarre has noticeably added weight to his frame, plays with intensity and continues to use his hands well, and looked simply like he will be a force in year two. A former wrestler, Navarre has the strength to deal with men larger than him yet is quick enough to get around them. Behind Navarre, Frost and Savage will be battling for playing time as will second-year player Deege Galt. Frost has shown flashes in his time with the Terps and hope is he will make those appearances more frequently. Same goes for Savage whose long arms help him in the pass rushing department.

David Holloway (left) and Wesley Jefferson (center) are the most experienced returning linebackers, while Christian Varner (right) is expected to be a key player in a deep Terrapin secondary.

"I would expect that we would be improved on the defensive line this year with the returnees and the progress of certain players," said Friedgen. "Jeremy Navarre's progress has been good to see and I hope a few other players at that position can help us out. Conrad Bolston had a good junior year and should be even better this season and at the nose. Dre Moore just needs to play at a high level every down. We know what we have in Feliciano so he will be challenged."

Linebackers

Similar to the concerns at tight end, the linebacking corps has lost a standout in 2005 ACC Defensive Player of the Year D'Qwell Jackson and fellow starter William Kershaw. Despite those losses, Maryland enters this year excited about its group of linebackers.

At LEO, Trey Covington returns after a solid first season as a starter. Covington is a sideline-to-sideline type of player and a good pass rusher. He improved on his run support last season, the strength of teammate Jermaine Lemons. Include in the mix redshirt freshmen Barrod Heggs and Jared Harrell (2005 defensive scout team Player of the Year) as well as athletic newcomer Brian Whitmore, and the Terrapins appear set for years to come. Heggs is growing at a rate that makes him a potential candidate at end, but regardless, Maryland has 3-4 players sophomore or younger at LEO and no lack of experience – a good combination.

The man looking to replace Jackson and move into the position that has produced three of the last five league defensive players of the year is junior Wesley Jefferson. Jefferson does not possess the size that made E.J. Henderson a force nor the quickness that catapulted Jackson all over the field. Simply put, he is a natural football player. He makes plays on game day, rarely misses a tackle and always seems to be around the ball. There could be additions to the group of "Mike" linebackers, but for now that group includes Jefferson, veteran Chase

Bullock, Alex Schultz and newcomer Alex Wujciak. Wujciak, a highly-touted prep, is athletic enough to have been a standout for his high school basketball team in the fall while also working to add weight for his first camp as a collegian.

Despite the loss of Kershaw, the Terps could be better than last year at "Will" linebacker. Sophomore Erin Henderson returns from injury and will battle for the starting job with Moses Fokou, a transfer who has excited coaches. Henderson will be tough to beat out, however, as he is a playmaker who runs well, has good size and plays with as much intensity as any player the Terrapins have.

Fokou spent last season on the scout team but opened coaches' eyes every week. He continued to make play after play in the spring and the likelihood is that he and Henderson will share the field, regardless of who starts. True freshman Chris Clinton joined the team as an early enrollee in the spring and performed well, while another athletic player who sat out last season due to transfer rules, Rick Costa, also joins the fray. The brother of center Phil, Rick Costa has good speed and strength and seems to thrive on hitting.

Entering his third year starting at the "Sam" spot is senior David Holloway, the team's leading returning tackler from a year ago. Holloway is a steady force who rarely makes assignment errors and combines skill in run support as well as the pass rush. He will get a push from the speedy Dave Philistin, one of several Terps who saw action as a true freshman in 2005. Philistin is slightly bigger than Holloway and runs under a 4.6 in the 40-yard dash. Also working on the strong side will be Jeff Clement and Steve Pfister.

"I am never going to have a problem with competition and that is what we have at linebacker this year," said Friedgen. "We are young, but I don't see that as a problem with this group. I am looking forward to seeing a healthy Erin Henderson and what he can do and also what role the transfers will play. I have complete confidence in Wesley (Jefferson). I don't expect him to be an E.J. or D'Qwell, but you can't have those type of expectations for any player in his first year starting."

Defensive Backs

Friedgen credits Tim Banks, a former college defensive back and a Gary Blackney disciple from his days at Bowling Green, for the work he has done with the secondary following Blackney's retirement last year. Banks has done nice work with the returning players, but where his coaching has shown is with several of the younger defensive backs.

Senior Josh Wilson is the anchor of the group at boundary cornerback. Wilson is one of the team's fastest players, good in coverage and is arguably one of the best corners in the league in run support. He is also versatile enough to move to field corner if called upon. Sophomore Kevin Barnes works behind Wilson and – along with Jamari McCullough – is coming off of a very good spring. At 6-1, Barnes is the team's tallest corner and a good leaper. McCullough showed a nose for the ball in spring and made great strides over last season, giving the Terps added depth. Redshirt Adam Kareem and newcomers Pha'Terrell Washington and LaQuan Williams will also work on the boundary side.

There will be competition for playing time at field cornerback. Junior Isaiah Gardner will look to lock down the starting job in fall. The former Notre Dame transfer played well last season and will look to make use of what might be the secondary's all-around most athletic frame (sub-4.4 in the 40-yard dash; 42-inch vertical). Challenging Gardner will be Richard Taylor – another player who has made great strides in the last year – and Anthony Wiseman, the second-year player who seems fully recovered from a knee injury suffered his senior year of high school and back to his speedy ways. Two newcomers, Brandon Jackson-Mills and Taji Thornton, will also get their first crack at playing time on the field side.

Senior Marcus Wimbush heads the list at strong safety playing the pass better than he has at in point in his tenure. A big hitter, Wimbush will get competition from former Navy cornerback Hunter Reddick and second-year player Jeff Allen. Reddick will give the team versatility in nickel and dime packages with his cover ability and showed in the spring that he is a playmaker.

Christian Varner enters his second year as the team's starting free safety. Varner is instinctive and brings another big hitter to the defensive backfield. His cover skills are improved and he brings leadership to the secondary. Fellow junior J.J. Justice has also stepped up his skills in coverage and will compete with Varner at the spot. Justice runs well for a player his size and is has played both safety spots, giving the Terps even more versatility.

"I couldn't be happier with the job Tim Banks has done," said Friedgen. "Players like Josh Wilson we didn't have to worry about – we knew we would be okay there. But where I have seen a difference is in players like Jamari McCullough and Kevin Barnes. Even a player like Marcus Wimbush. They just seem to be more comfortable with what they are doing and I think Tim has done a great job communicating with them. It has improved our depth and improved competition."

Specialists

Maryland returns nearly every player in key special teams slots this year. It did not lose a kicker, punter or snapper and appears to be in good shape in the returns.

Senior Dan Ennis and sophomore Obi Egekeze will be at it again in the fall, working to determine the team's starting placekicker. Ennis got off to a fast start last season, hitting his first 11 field goals, but had a little trouble down the stretch, opening the race back up. Egekeze injured his leg in camp last year and was never a factor, but hopes to display the strong leg that had him highly-touted as a prep. He will also be in a battle for kickoff duties with Chris Roberts.

Entering his final season, Adam Podlesh is a viable All-American candidate at punter. Podlesh has had three outstanding seasons to date, displaying any quality the Terps could have hoped for out of the position – distance, hang time, directional kicking and placement.

The long snapping duties will be manned by Andrew Schmitt, while Brendan McDermond will handle short snaps. The Terrapins enter this season with the second-longest streak in the nation for games without a punt block, dating back to November of the 1999 season (Georgia has the longest streak with its last block taking place in September, 1999).

The lone loss from last season was Jo Jo Walker, one of the league leaders in all-purpose yards. Handling punts will be Danny Oquendo, a tough player whose good hands won him the job. Josh Wilson will open the year getting a look returning kicks, giving the team a speedy getaway threat at that spot.

"We need to improve at kicker," said Friedgen. "It's as simple as that. I don't know if I need to put more pressure on them, but that is what I am going to do and we will see who comes out best. Adam Podlesh is one of the best punters in the country and hopefully he closes his career with his finest season. He has given us all that we could have asked to this point."
