TERPS BREAK ACC ATTENDANCE RECORD

- The Terps' sold-out game vs. the Tar Heels on Jan. 28 set a new ACC single-game attendance record for a women's basketball game. Fans filled the 17,950-seat arena to support the Terps and then filled the five-year old building again for its final regular-season game against Duke on Feb. 18.
- Maryland boasts the top six crowds ever in ACC women's basketball history (games between conference teams), and eight of the top 10. Five of those attendances have come this season. The 12,295 that attended the Michigan State game would also rank among the top 10 attendances in conference history.

TERPS SIXTH IN THE NATION IN HOME ATTENDANCE

- Maryland ranks sixth in the nation in home attendance, averaging over 9,500 fans in 16 games. It is the highest-ever ranking for the Terps. The per game average is a school record.
- While the Terrapins average is ranked sixth, their total home attendance of 152,523 is the third-most in the nation, behind only Tennessee and Connecticut.
- In the five years head coach Brenda Frese has been at the helm, the average attendance for home games has increased over 450 percent, from an average of just over 2,000 fans to over 9,500 per game.

SINGLE-GAME ATTENDANCES AMONG THE HIGHEST IN THE NATION

- Maryland's home sell outs vs North Carolina on Jan. 28 and against Duke on Feb. 18 rank are tied for the fifth-largest crowds in the nation this season.
- The Terps boast three of the top 40 attendances in the nation. The 12,295 that supported the Terps against Michigan State on Jan. 6 is 30th in the country in single-game attendances.

TERPS DRAW BIG CROWDS

- For the first time in the program's history, more than 100,000 fans have come to College Park to support their beloved Terps, surpassing the 150,000-mark for the season. They rank fifth in the nation in average home attendance, averaging 9,533 fans per game.
- The Terps surpassed the 100,000-mark in the sellout vs. North Carolina. Last year, over 77,000 fans attended 13 home games which had been the record heading into this season. They also ranked 21st in the nation in average home attendance, drawing 4,813 fans per game.
- On the road, the Terps are attracting big crowds as well. They have played in front of two capacity crowds (at Loyola and at Duke) and have also played in near-sold out games. The Terps' road games (not including neutral site games at the Junkanoo Jam) have been their opponents' biggest or second-highest crowd of the season in all but one away game. Florida State set a new program attendance record of 4,732 when the Terps were in Tallahassee on Feb. 15.
- So far this season, more than 200,000 fans have watched the Terrapins play, at home and on the road, surpassing that mark against Duke. The Terps ranked ninth in total attendance last year, as 211,612 fans watched the Terps in 38 games.
- In one sell-out game at Comcast Center, Maryland outdrew two ACC teams for the season (Georgia Tech, Miami). Its combined attendance of both sell-outs outdrew the home season totals of six teams.

WHAT A DIFFERENCE FOUR YEARS MAKES

- The crowd support for Maryland women's basketball has grown immensely since Shay Doron and Aurelie Noirez arrived on campus four years ago. In Doron's collegiate debut on Nov. 21, 2003, 683 fans sat in the stands and watched her make and NCAA-record 23 free throws against Coppin State. This year, Doron and Aurelie bid farewell to College Park in front of a sold out Comcast Center, nearly 18,000 fans.
- Noirez did not play in that game because she sat out the first eight games of the season due to NCAA eligibility rules.
- In 2003-04, Maryland averaged just over 2,500 fans at 15 home games.
