UNFINISHED BUSINESS

- Despite winning the ACC championship and going a spectacular 21-1, including an undefeated record at the Field Hockey & Lacrosse Complex, the Terps, which return every starter from last season, have some unfinished business to take care of --- bringing the national championship back to College Park.
- It had been five seemingly long seasons since the esteemed Maryland women's lacrosse program had advanced to the final four, but the wait finally ended in 2010 as the Terps landed in Towson for national semifinals.
- North Carolina narrowly edged Maryland, 8-7, in the Final Four.
- This year's Terps are a year older and a year wiser -- boasting possibly ten upperclassmen in their starting lineup -- and the goal has never been clearer.

MARYLAND CRUISES PAST GEORGE MASON, 16-4

- No. 2 Maryland used a ferocious 10-0 run to begin the first half en route to a 16-4 defeat of George Mason on the road.
- Maryland was able to employ the majority of its bench Tuesday as 28 Terps landed on the box score. Nine different players scored with Caitlyn McFadden leading the charge with a hat trick and four assists for a season-high seven points.
- The Terps outscored Mason 5-2 in the second period and held a significant 14-7 shot advantage in the period. A swarming Maryland defense forced Mason into 11 turnovers in the second half alone while the Patriots were successful on a mere 10-of-18 clear attempts on the match.
- Karri Ellen Johnson, Alex Aust, Amanda Spinnenweber, Brandi Jones and Katie Schwarzmann each notched two goals apiece.

TENACIOUS D

- George Mason's Megan Udovich finally stymied Maryland's defense with a goal with 2:33 remaining in the first half to stop Maryland's streak of 67 consecutive minutes without surrendering a goal.
- Maryland, which is allowing a mere 5.8 goals per game this season, held No. 9 Virginia scoreless the final 39:43 of last Friday's match before preventing Mason from seeing the back of the net for 27:27 to begin Tuesday's game in Fairfax.
